

Exploitation

Some people thought it was cute, but others recognized it for what it really was, crass exploitation. For the holidays, UPC Wind sponsored a "coloring contest" in Cohocton's elementary school and published pictures of the winners in The Valley News. The object? To use our children to make their controversial wind project look kid-friendly.

Industrial speculation in the elementary school

Winners of UPC Wind's "Coloring Contest"

If Wal-Mart tried to put a new megastore on top of Lent Hill and ran into a lot of local opposition with competing yard signs and all, then tried to sponsor a "coloring contest" in the elementary school, we hope someone in our school administration would show better sense than they did with this caper.

Have you seen enough of UPC Wind's unrighteous posturing? First they seek to exploit our hills and viewscape, then our Town Board and tax base, and now our children. Catch up with what's going on before it catches up with you. Visit us online at www.cohoctonfree.com.

